

Reproduced from Governance, Politics and the Environment: A Singapore Study by Maria Francesch-Huidobro (Singapore: Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, 2008). This version was obtained electronically direct from the publisher on condition that copyright is not infringed. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies. Individual articles are available at

< <http://bookshop.iseas.edu.sg> >

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Maria Francesch-Huidobro is Assistant Professor at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Hong Kong. She has also taught at the Department of Politics and Public Administration, University of Hong Kong. In December 2008, she will take a new Assistant Professor post at the Department of Public and Social Administration, City University of Hong Kong. She received her Ph.D. in Politics and Public Administration from the University of Hong Kong in 2005. In 2006, she was given the Best Ph.D. Dissertation Award (2004–05) by the Hong Kong Political Science Association. She specializes in comparative environmental policy and governance and comparative politics. Her current research interests include the impact of government-NGOs relations in Asian polities' governance transformations, the city-level political dimension of the multi-level governance problem of climate change, and the rationale behind the formation of city coalitions in curbing and adapting to climate change.