RESTRICTURING OF SOVIET FAR EASTERN
AIR POWER

DEREK DA CUNHA

This paper examines the restructuring (perestroika) of the various Soviet Far Eastern air service components over the last decade and particularly within the context of the new era of superpower détente. Thematically, it focuses on four specific Soviet air operational areas - continental, maritime, ground attack, and air defence - and attempts to ascertain whether Soviet war-fighting capabilities in each of them is credible. It also assesses the extent to which Soviet air power doctrine has changed over the last ten years largely in response to the introduction of new technology aircraft, the development of Japanese and U.S. fleet capabilities, and more generally within the context of the Soviet perception of reduced international tensions.

INSTITUTE OF SOUTHEAST ASIAN STUDIES
For two decades, ASEAN has officially been striving for the establishment of a Zone of Peace, Freedom and Neutrality (ZOPFAN) in Southeast Asia. This study examines the ZOPFAN proposal in terms of its origins and genesis, its conceptualization, and its prospects of being put into operation. Special consideration is given to the way the concept deals with the problems of zonal neutrality. The study concludes that the gap between ZOPFAN in theory and ZOPFAN in reality is bound to remain for quite sometime. Whether the gap between theory and reality will be narrowed increasingly depends on the Southeast Asian states.
Contemporary Southeast Asia is a journal that specializes in the politics, international relations and security-related issues of Southeast Asia and its wider geostrategic environment. Although it was originally conceived as a more general journal of the social sciences in 1979, CSEA has come to focus more closely on the concerns of the Institute's Regional Strategic Studies Programme since 1987. Apart from serving as a reliable and up-to-date source of information on various events and trends in regional politics, international relations and security questions that affect Southeast Asia, CSEA also publishes the results of original research on these subjects by both scholars and other interested persons.

Contemporary Southeast Asia is published quarterly in June, September, December and March by the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies.
