Japan, the United States, and prospects for the Asia-Pacific century

The Institute of Southeast Asian Studies (ISEAS) was established as an autonomous organization in 1968. It is a regional research centre for scholars and other specialists concerned with modern Southeast Asia, particularly the many-faceted problems of stability and security, economic development, and political and social change.

The Institute is governed by a twenty-two-member Board of Trustees comprising nominees from the Singapore Government, the National University of Singapore, the various Chambers of Commerce, and professional and civic organizations. A ten-man Executive Committee oversees day-to-day operations; it is chaired by the Director, the Institute's chief academic and administrative officer.

Acknowledgements

This book is substantially the product of research undertaken while on leave of absence from the Congressional Research Service (CRS) of the U.S. Library of Congress as a research fellow at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies. I am very grateful to the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, and especially its Director, Professor K.S. Sandhu, for providing the opportunity to carry out research on this timely and important topic. I owe a great deal to the ISEAS staff and the community of scholars from four continents with whom I exchanged ideas, shared experiences and enjoyed fellowship and friendship.

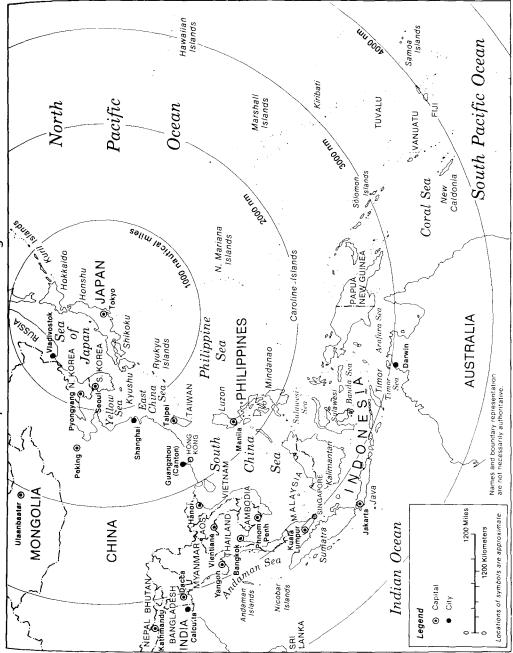

The idea for the project emerged during brief trips to Taiwan, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore and Japan beginning in early 1988. After formulating a preliminary concept during the summer of 1989, I took up the subject in earnest during my October 1989–June 1990 fellowship at ISEAS. During this period I had the opportunity to travel to Japan and a number of other Asian countries, namely Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand and India, to collect more data and test my hypotheses.

In addition to Professor Sandhu and ISEAS, I am obligated to a number of other individuals, institutions and agencies, who directly or indirectly aided this research. These include my own service, which generously gave me leave of absence to pursue this valuable career development opportunity; the U.S. Information Agency, which sponsored me on a speaking tour in Japan; the Asia Foundation and its then field representative in Kuala Lumpur, Julio A. Andrews; E. Gene Smith, Director of the Library of Congress Field Office in Jakarta, Indonesia; and Hitoshi Matsuoka of the Japanese Institute for Domestic and International Studies.

After several years of research, one's intellectual debt to other toilers in the same or adjacent vineyards becomes increasingly heavy. A very short list would include Robert C. Orr, Jr., of the Stanford Program in Kyoto, whose published writing and network of contacts in Japan have served my own purposes very well, and my colleagues at CRS, Robert Sutter, Raymond Ahearn, and Larry Nowels who provided valuable insights and critical reviews. I also owe a debt to the anonymous readers of the original manuscript for their thoughtful comments and suggestions. One reader, in particular, took considerable pains to critique the draft and offer very helpful suggestions. None of these, of course, bear any responsibility for the findings of this book.

I also wish to express my appreciation for secretarial, research and graphics support provided by Kathleen McCarthy, of the CRS Foreign Affairs and National Defense Division; for graphics assistance from Paul Graney, also of CRS; and for research assistance provided by Perry Bechky, a CRS student volunteer intern, during the initial phase of this project in the summer of 1989.

Finally, I would be remiss not to mention my deep appreciation for the support and forbearance of my wife, Nancy, and my children, Kate and Andrew, who allowed me to uproot them for nine months and install them in a new and sometimes trying situation half way around the world. I am conscious of the fact that while the adventure of living and travelling in Asia was a positive one for all of us, the overall balance of benefits and costs was less favourable in their case than in mine.
