

THE EDITORS

C.Y. Ng, Ph.D., is a Fellow at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore. He began his career as an officer at the Singapore Ministry of Home Affairs. Subsequently, he studied as an undergraduate at La Trobe University, Melbourne, Australia. He proceeded to graduate education in economics and completed his doctoral programme in 1984. He has taught various courses in economics at La Trobe University and Burwood Teachers' Training College, Melbourne, and has also been engaged as a consultant and lecturer to the National Productivity Board in Singapore.

Ryokichi Hirono is currently Professor of Development Economics and Manpower Studies at Seiki University, Tokyo. During the last two decades, he has served extensively with foreign and international organizations overseas. He has been variously Visiting Professor and/or Fellow with the National University of Singapore, the University of Malaya, Monash University, and the Australian National University. He has also served as the chief of the Development Planning Division at the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and as a consultant to the Asian Development Bank, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Independent Commission on International Development Issues (the Brandt Commission), and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Robert Y. Siy, Jr., Ph.D., is currently an Assistant Professor at the Institute of Management, Philippines. He received his doctorate from Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, in 1982. He has been a consultant to various international organisations among which are the International Labour Organisation, the East-West Centre Resource Systems Institute, the Ford Foundation, and the United States Agency for International Development. He has also written extensively on the role of science and technology in development.