Non-Traditional Security in Asia

The Institute of Southeast Asian Studies (ISEAS) was established as an autonomous organization in 1968. It is a regional centre dedicated to the study of socio-political, security and economic trends and developments in Southeast Asia and its wider geostrategic and economic environment. The Institute's research programmes are the Regional Economic Studies (RES, including ASEAN and APEC), Regional Strategic and Political Studies (RSPS), and Regional Social and Cultural Studies (RSCS).

ISEAS Publishing, an established academic press, has issued more than 2,000 books and journals. It is the largest scholarly publisher of research about Southeast Asia from within the region. ISEAS Publishing works with many other academic and trade publishers and distributors to disseminate important research and analyses from and about Southeast Asia to the rest of the world.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book has been a collaborative effort from the very beginning and draws on the research conducted by a dedicated, young and dynamic team. The mission of the Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) is to conduct research and produce policy-relevant analyses aimed at furthering awareness and building capacity to address NTS issues and challenges in the Asia-Pacific region and beyond. Indeed to fulfil its mission, this collection is an important contribution to the dissemination of knowledge and understanding of the salient policy challenges Asia faces today. Through this book, we aim to inform scholars, students and policy-makers about the range of prevalent NTS issues and how to approach them in a systematic and informed fashion. We recognize that the policy areas covered are not an exhaustive list of NTS challenges. Rather, we see this book as the starting point of a much larger conversation about Asian human security and the multiple policy dilemmas faced across this region. It is through this contribution that we and the contributors hope to advance the understanding of NTS issues and challenges in Asia by highlighting gaps in knowledge and policy, and identifying best practices among state and non-state actors in responding to these challenges. We also hope to contribute to building the institutional capacity of governments, and regional and international organizations to respond to NTS challenges through this conversation.

We are grateful to the Ford Foundation for providing the funding to establish a regional network of scholars and institutions from which this collection has benefited greatly. Known as NTS-Asia, with its secretariat housed at the RSIS Centre for NTS Studies, network members include nineteen members apart from the RSIS Centre for NTS Studies. These are the Asia Human Community (AHC), Japan; Asia-Pacific Centre for the Responsibility to Protect (APR2P); Bangladesh Institute of International and Strategic Studies (BIISS); Bangladesh Institute of Peace and Security Studies (BIPSS); Centre of Asian Studies (CAS), University of Hong Kong; Centre for International Security Studies (CISS), University of Sydney; Centre for the Study of Developing Societies (CSDS), India; Centre for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS), Indonesia; Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies, Chulalongkorn University; Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies (IAPS), Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS), China; La Trobe University Institute for Human Security; Ilmin International Relations Institute (IIRI), Korea University; Institute for Strategic and Development Studies (ISDS), Philippines; Institute of World Economics and Politics (IWEP), China; Institute for World Economics and Politics (IWEP), Vietnam; Refugee and Migratory Movements Research Unity (RMMRU), Bangladesh; Regional Centre for Strategic Studies (RCSS), Sri Lanka; Women In Security, Conflict Management and Peace (WISCOMP), Foundation for His Holiness the Dalai Lama, India; and The WorldFish Center, Malaysia. These organizations have provided key perspectives at regional meetings and conferences addressing the various NTS challenges Asia faces today.

Indeed, our thanks also go to the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation for providing a multi-year grant that enabled us to bring together many of those from the regional network and contributed to the sustainability of our global research team at the centre and their ability to experience NTS challenges first hand. Furthermore our internal and cross-border conflict programme benefited from a two-year grant from the Australian Responsibility to Protect Fund to assess the traction of the Responsibility to Protect norm in Asia. Without our funders and networks, the depth and breadth of issues and challenges covered would not have been possible.

We would like to extend our appreciation to the whole NTS research team who have worked hard in getting this publication out. A special thanks goes to Ong Suet Yen, Cheryl Lim, Steven Poh, and the late Jaspal Singh of the publication team and to Regina Arokiasamy, Belinda Chng, and Josephine Ng for their administrative support. Finally, we would like to express our deep thanks to those that have engaged with us and the contributors on our various fieldwork trips, telephone interviews and meetings. Without listening to those affected by various policy responses, it is impossible to contribute meaningfully to policy development. It is with this in mind that we hope we have listened and understood, and have added in a meaningful way to these political and policy debates. All errors remain the authors' own.

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Mely Caballero-Anthony is an Associate Professor and Head of the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS), Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. Until May 2012, she served as Director of External Relations at the ASEAN Secretariat. She is also a member of the World Economic Forum (WEF) Global Agenda Council on Conflict Prevention and Secretary-General of the Consortium of Non-Traditional Security Studies in Asia (NTS-Asia). Dr Anthony's research interests include regionalism and regional security in the Asia Pacific, multilateral security cooperation, politics and international relations in ASEAN, conflict prevention and management, as well as human security. She has published extensively in peer-reviewed journals on a broad range of security issues in the Asia Pacific. Her latest publications, both single-authored and co-edited, include: "The Responsibility to Protect in Southeast Asia: Opening Up Spaces for Advancing Human Security", Pacific Review, vol. 25, no. 1 (2012); "ASEAN and Climate Change: Building Resilience through Regional Initiative", in Human Security and Climate Change in Southeast Asia: Managing Risk and Resilience (2012); Energy and Non-Traditional Security (NTS) in Asia and Rethinking Energy Security in Asia: A Non-Traditional View of Human Security (both 2012). Dr Anthony is a member of the Council for Security Cooperation in the Asia Pacific (CSCAP) Study Group on the Responsibility to Protect, and also a member of the International Advisory Board of the Asia Pacific Centre for the Responsibility to Protect (APCR2P), and the Global Consortium on Security Transformation (GCST). Her current research focus takes on the broad theme of Governance and Non-traditional Security issues. She is also working on a project on Revisiting Regionalism in Asia.

Julie Balen is a health systems and policy researcher at Imperial College London, based at the Centre for Health Policy and supported by Imperial's Junior Research Fellowship. Her research includes exploratory, descriptive and comparative studies of selected health systems, with a focus on human resource management, capacity building and health service delivery, using a trans-disciplinary approach. Julie is a former Overseas Research Fellow at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, based in Thailand, and a former Post-doctoral Fellow at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore, where she conducted policy-relevant research on health systems integration, global health security and governance, and pandemic preparedness across Southeast Asia. Julie has substantial fieldwork experience within numerous ASEAN member states and across West Africa. She obtained her Ph.D. in Public Health and Epidemiology from the University of Queensland, Australia and her B.Sc in Biology from Imperial College, London.

Priyanka Bhalla is currently pursuing her Ph.D. in the Lee Kuan Yew School of Public Policy at the National University of Singapore. Prior to this she was an Associate Research Fellow at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore and a Project Manager with the United Nations Population Fund and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, both in Nepal and New York. Her research interests include property rights transitions during forest tenure reform, disaster preparedness and response in the Asia region, and issues related to migration, including internal displacement and statelessness.

Belinda Chng is Programme Development Manager and Researcher for the Health Security and the Irregular Migration Programmes at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore. Previously, as Programme Manager, she oversaw coordination of five research programmes and managed a range of projects funded by government and private foundations. She was formerly Associate Research Fellow for NTS and Research Analyst at the International Center for Political Violence and Terrorism Research. Prior to her current role, she was Policy Advisor at the APEC Policy Support Unit, where she advised the Unit on strategic planning, mandate extension, outreach and engagement of APEC stakeholders, development of research capacity, and conducted research on emergency preparedness and food security. Her interests are in the areas of crisis preparedness, conflict prevention and management, human security in ASEAN, state-society relations, governance, organizational analysis and communications.

Alistair D. B. Cook is a Visiting Research Fellow at the East Asian Institute at the National University of Singapore. He is a former research fellow and programme lead for the internal and cross-border conflict and NTS-Plus programmes at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore and a former honorary fellow at the School of Social and Political Sciences, Melbourne University, Australia. His current research projects include non-traditional security issues in East and Southeast Asia with a focus on China-ASEAN relations and Asia-Pacific regionalism. His most recent publications, both single and co-authored, include: “Myanmar’s China Policy: Agendas, Strategies and Challenges”, China Report 48, no. 3 (2012), and “Unpacking the Scarborough Shoal Dispute”, East Asian Policy, vol. 4, issue 3 (2012).

Pau Khan Khup Hangzo is an Associate Research Fellow at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore. He currently researches on the geopolitics of Transboundary Rivers in South and Southeast Asia and the practice of water diplomacy by small, resource-scarce states such as Singapore and Israel. His other research interest includes transnational crime and irregular movement of people whose research he lead under the Centre’s NTS-Plus programme. He also has a special interest in analysing identity-based ethnic conflicts including those in India and Myanmar. He has a Bachelor’s degree in Geography from the University of Delhi, India and a Masters degree in Strategic Studies from the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies.

Lina Gong is a Ph.D. candidate at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) and Research Associate with the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies. She holds a BA and MA in English Language and Literature from Sichuan University, China, and a MSc. in International Relations from Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. Lina’s research interests include conflict-induced NTS issues in Southeast Asia, the diffusion of the responsibility to protect in East Asia, and Chinese foreign policy. Her master’s thesis examines the evolution of the Responsibility to Protect between 2001 and 2009. Her Ph.D. dissertation explores the reasons behind China’s increasing receptiveness for UN peacekeeping operations.

Sofiah Jamil is an Adjunct Research Associate at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore. She holds a masters degree in international relations from NTU and is currently pursuing her doctorate in international, political and strategic studies at The Australian National University. Prior to pursuing her doctorate, Sofiah was an Associate Research Fellow at the RSIS Centre for NTS Studies. Her published works include “Development as a double-edged sword: Managing environmental movement in Singapore’s urban environment”, in Environmental Movements around the world: Shades of Green in Politics and Culture (2013); two co-authored chapters in an edited volume on Energy and Non-Traditional Security in East Asia (2012); and “Islam & Environmentalism: Greening Our Youth”, in Igniting Thought, Unleashing Youth: Perspectives on Muslim Youth and Activism in Singapore (2009).

Manpavan Kaur is lecturer-in-law with the University of London (UOL), International Programmes at ITC School of Laws, Singapore. Prior to this position, Manpavan was research analyst at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies. In this position, Manpavan undertook research in her interest areas, particularly internal conflict and international criminal law. In addition, Manpavan has keen research interests in the areas of human security and international development, human rights, and transnational crimes such as human trafficking. Manpavan graduated with a second upper class LLB (Hons) from Brunel University, London and possesses an LLM (Merit) in International Development Law and Human Rights from the University of Warwick, United Kingdom obtained in 2009. Manpavan has previously worked as a case manager with revenue and customs on criminal border detections and with immigration authorities in the United Kingdom.

Koh Swee Lean Collin is an Associate Research Fellow in the Military Studies Programme at the Institute of Defense and Strategic Studies (IDSS), S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, Nanyang Technological University. Prior to this, he was a research analyst at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore. His research interests are vested in both non-traditional and traditional security studies, in particular energy security issues and military developments in the Asia Pacific. He received his B.Sc in materials science and engineering from Nanyang Technological University and his M.Sc in strategic studies from the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies. His most recent publications include two co-authored chapters “Rethinking Energy Security:

A Non-Traditional View of Human Security” (2012) and “Rethinking Market Governance and Energy Security” (2012).

Irene A. Kuntjoro is a Senior Researcher for political, security and foreign affairs at the Embassy of the Republic of Korea in Jakarta, Indonesia. Previously she was an analyst at a British risk consultancy firm based in Singapore. She is a former Associate Research Fellow and Centre Event Manager at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore. Prior to Singapore, Irene worked for a number of NGOs in Jakarta as a junior consultant and in other capacities. Her most recent published work is “Climate Security and Development in Southeast Asia: The Limits of UNESCAP’s Green Growth Approach”, in Human Security and Climate Change in Southeast Asia: Managing Risk and Resilience (2012). She holds a BA in International Relations from the University of Indonesia and masters in International Security and Terrorism from the University of Nottingham, UK where she was a Chevening scholar.

Arpita Mathur is a Singapore-based scholar and is a former visiting research fellow, S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) and at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies. Prior to her engagement with the RSIS, she was an associate fellow at the Institute for Defence Studies and Analyses, New Delhi, India. She completed her doctorate in International Politics from Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, India. Her areas of interest include East Asian politics and relations with South Asia, Japan’s domestic politics, foreign and security policies. She has also been working on gender and food security issues and has written an Asia Security Initiative Policy Series working paper entitled “Women and Food Security: A Comparison of South Asia and Southeast Asia” (March 2011). Besides, she has authored a monograph, several papers in peer-reviewed journals, book chapters, policy brief and commentaries on these issues. She had also been involved in teaching post-graduate masters students while at the RSIS.

Kevin Punzalan is a Lecturer in the Consular & Diplomatic Affairs Program at De La Salle-College of St. Benilde in Manila, the Philippines. He also lectured at the International Studies Department of De La Salle University. Previously, he was a research analyst for the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore. He published several single and co-authored papers for the Centre. He maintains an interest in both history and security studies. Current research interests include the evolution of renewable energy policy in Southeast Asia, particularly the Philippines. He has also studied the history of nuclear energy policy in the Philippines and the role of civil society organizations in shaping energy policy. Aside from these fields, he also comments on domestic Philippine politics. He holds a Master's Degree in Strategic Studies from the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore.

Nur Azha Putra is Research Associate at the Energy Security Division of the Energy Studies Institute (ESI), National University of Singapore. His research interests include geopolitics, hydro politics, and cyber security. He is a former Associate Research Fellow at the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies in Singapore and a former journalist with the national Malay newspaper, Berita Harian (BH), where he received the "Special Award for Excellence". Azha frequently writes on community and nation building, and geopolitics. His most recent publications include: Energy and Non-Traditional Security (NTS) in Asia and Rethinking Energy Security: A Non-Traditional View of Human Security (both 2012). He obtained his masters from Nanyang Technological University and his Bachelor of Information Technology from Central Queensland University, Australia. He was recently awarded a Professional Diploma in Risk Planning from NUS-Asia Institute of Risk Management and is also a certified Enterprise Risk Manager (2012).

Sadhavi Sharma is currently pursuing her Ph.D. in International Political Economy at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. She is a former visiting researcher with the RSIS Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies. She is currently researching the politics of palm oil — how the sustainability norm is advocated by the interplay between state, civil society and industry. She is also interested in examining the current international development agenda and the culture of limits. She has previously worked with news organizations such as Hindustan Times and Bloomberg, as well as in the non-profit sector, and has published in Spiked-online, Indian Express, and Bengal Post among others.
