

About the Authors

Lim Mah-Hui's professional background spans thirty years as an international banker and academician. He has a multi-disciplinary background in economics, sociology and finance. He taught in the University of Malaya, Kuala Lumpur and later in Temple University in the US. He was a post-doctoral fellow at Duke University. After academia, he went into banking and finance and worked in major international banks including Chemical Bank (now JP Morgan Chase), Credit Suisse First Boston, Deutsche Bank, Standard Chartered Bank and the Asian Development Bank in different parts of the world. He was lead author of the book, Nowhere to Hide: The Great Financial Crisis and Challenges for Asia (2010) and Local Democracy Denied? A Journey into Local Government in Malaysia (2020). Besides numerous journal articles, he also contributes to the Edge (Malaysia), Straits Times, Bangkok Post, Philippines Inquirer and South China Morning Post.

Michael Heng Siam-Heng is a retired professor of management studies. He has academic background in Physics, Computer Science and a PhD in Management Studies. He has held academic appointments at Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam, University of South Australia, National University of Singapore, Fudan University and four other Asian universities. He was the associate editor of the business weekly Asia360°. He has written five books, including two on the 2008 Global Financial Crisis—Destructive Creativity of Wall Street (2009) and The Great Recession: History, Ideology, Hubris and Nemesis (2010). He also contributes to South China Morning Post, China Daily (HK), IPP Review, Edge (Malaysia) and Straits Times.