Cambridge Asia-Pacific Studies

Cambridge University Press is to launch a new series on the contemporary Asia-Pacific region. Cambridge Asia-Pacific Studies will provide a focus for scholarly work on the region as a whole, and its component sub-regions, namely Northeast Asia, Southeast Asia, and the Pacific islands. Among the topics that the editorial board are particularly interested in are the regionalisation of production, environmental issues, democratisation, ethnicity and gender, science and technology, the evolving security balance, and religion and politics.

The editorial board will regard most favourably those studies that engage in comparative analysis and/or relate their findings to region-wide issues. The emphasis will be on the contemporary period although manuscripts with a historical focus that have particular relevance for contemporary developments will also be welcomed. Studies that challenge prevailing orthodoxies will be particularly welcomed.

Manuscripts will be submitted to a rigorous process of review—usually by one member of the editorial board plus an outside reader.

Contemporary Southeast Asia is a journal that specializes in the politics, international relations and security-related issues of Southeast Asia and its wider geostrategic environment. Although it was originally conceived as a more general journal of the social sciences in 1979, CSEA has come to focus more closely on the concerns of the Institute's Regional Strategic Studies Programme since 1987. Apart from serving as a reliable and up-to-date source of information on various events and trends in regional politics, international relations and security questions that affect Southeast Asia, CSEA also publishes the results of original research on these subjects by both scholars and other interested persons.
