REGIONAL OUTLOOK

Southeast Asia 1992 - 93

The world is undergoing dramatic transformations in the wake of the crumbling of the Cold War order, and the ebbs and flows of these changes are not passing unnoticed in Southeast Asia. Indeed, the region is witnessing its own mini-versions of glasnost and perestroika, as countries like Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, and Myanmar, for instance, seek their niches in the emerging opportunities and constraints that characterize the international economic and political scene. This, coupled with the dynamism of the member states of ASEAN, makes Southeast Asia a particularly promising and exciting area -- at a turning point in world history and human affairs.

Cast in a format and style that is unencumbered by lengthy analyses or commentaries, Regional Outlook provides succinct yet substantive and easily readable overviews and insights into the current geo-political and economic situations in the individual countries and the region as a whole, together with the likely trends over the next year or so. The review will serve as a useful and handy guide to the region's aspirations and prospects each year, in addition to casting a look ahead.

This handbook provides basic information on the Association of South-east Asian Nations (ASEAN), its organization and the various co-operation activities associated with it. The emphasis here is on economic co-operation. Although such information is available in many forms, it is mostly scattered in official documents and various literature on ASEAN. There is, thus, a need to provide the basic information in a handy volume, and this handbook attempts to fill that need.

Genesis of Power: General Sudirman and the Indonesian Military in Politics, 1945-49
By Salim Said

The dominant role of the Indonesian military has long been a characteristic feature of the Indonesian political scene. But how did this dominance emerge? To answer this question, Dr Salim Said delves into the circumstances of the Indonesian military's inception during the struggle for independence in the 1940s and the perceptions of its first commander-in-chief or panglima besar, General Sudirman. In his view, the fact that the military was a self-created institution rather than one established by the government or a political party, the fact that General Sudirman was elected by his troops rather than by the government, the weakness of indigenous political and governmental institutions at that time, and the experience of running a military government for eight months during the guerrilla war period led to the panglima besar's perception of the military as the main defender of the country's sovereignty and to the consequent assertive role of the military. In an epilogue to his historical account, Dr Salim observes that while the legitimacy of the military's participation in politics has remained unquestioned, new circumstances following General Sudirman's death have constantly forced it to redefine the precise nature of that participation.

Six of Author Salim Said's twenty-five years in journalism were spent as a journalist with the newspaper of the Indonesian armed forces, Angkatan Bersenjata—an experience that makes him particularly well suited to address the issue of the Indonesian military's role in politics.

The Asian Studies Review is the journal of the Asian Studies Association of Australia, Australia's peak organisation for all those interested in the study of Asia in Australia. Through their membership of the ASAA, the Asian Studies Review reaches over 800 academics, teachers, business people, public administrators and policy makers. By receiving the Review, they are able to keep up to date with major debates and initiatives in Asian studies in Australia.

Recent issues have examined topics as diverse as ecology and the economic history of Asia, China after Tiananmen, Asian immigration to Australia and the connection between Asian studies and Australian business. A large proportion of each issue is devoted to reviews of books chosen in light of their relevance to Asia, timeliness and significance - a particularly valuable resource for librarians.

Contemporary Southeast Asia is a journal that specializes in the politics, international relations and security-related issues of Southeast Asia and its wider geostrategic environment. Although it was originally conceived as a more general journal of the social sciences in 1979, CSEA has come to focus more closely on the concerns of the Institute's Regional Strategic Studies Programme since 1987. Apart from serving as a reliable and up-to-date source of information on various events and trends in regional politics, international relations and security questions that affect Southeast Asia, CSEA also publishes the results of original research on these subjects by both scholars and other interested persons.

Contemporary Southeast Asia is published quarterly in June, September, December and March by the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies.
